Research In Progress

- Exploring research on corruption in climate change intervention fund management: Lessons from the Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation (REDD+) Project in Nigeria
The study was carried out in forest-dependent communities in Cross River State, Nigeria using the Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation (REDD+) project as a case study. The field survey is being concluded after which data collected will be processed for reporting and dissemination of results. The study will provide empirical findings that will serve as basis for policy making and advocacy for improved climate change resource governance by providing insights into areas of flash points threatening its effectiveness among rural households in the study area.
- Poverty eradication in Africa beyond the MDGs: catalyzing young people for employment and entrepreneurial leadership
The study is an on-going interdisciplinary research involving a group of young faculty members from seven African universities with the funding support from the African Development Bank (AfDB) and Japan Trust Fund (JTF). While the proposal development has been completed, the field implementation is yet to commence. Study will provide empirical information on the nature of corruption and gender dynamics in Africa necessary for addressing the problem in order to ensure sustainable development of the continent.
- Corruption and gender dynamics in governance for sustainable development in Africa
The study is an on-going interdisciplinary research involving a group of young faculty members from seven African universities with the funding support from the African Development Bank (AfDB) and Japan Trust Fund (JTF). The proposal development has been completed and preparations are on-going for commencement of the field implementation.

- Rural-Urban markets linkage and implications for populace wellbeing: Lessons from selected produce assembly markets along rural-urban transport corridors in southwestern Nigeria

The proposal for the study was just concluded. The paper will rely primarily on synthesis of literature to draw its conclusions. A survey of buyers and sellers from selected open-air markets in the study area will also be conducted to provide a local perspective from which some important lessons may be drawn to enrich paper discussions. The expected output from the study include a book chapter and a blog article.
