VIII. RESEARCH:

(i) Completed

1. Aspects on the Chemical and Nutrient composition of cocoa Husk (Theobroma cacao) and potentials as a fish feed ingredient.
2. Nutritional qualities of rice bran and utilization in fish feeding.
3. Protein Requirements of the Nile Tilapia (Oreochromis niloticus)

(ii) In progress

- (a) “The Utilization of some Agro-Industrial Waste in the nutrition of cultured fish species”

Local plant, animal and industrial by-products are being assessed in terms of their nutritional composition. Some of these screened waste materials are selected as dietary ingredients in the formulation of balanced rations, which are evaluated in the production of ‘Tilapia’ and other tropical fish species. This study was started in 1984 and is still in progress. Due to the continuous increase in the price of conventional feed stuffs, the scope of the research is expanding, with more agro-industrial materials being examined for their potentials as feed ingredients for fish farming.

- (b) “The development of Nigeria’s Brackish water potentials for fish farming”.

There is an enormous fisheries potential of about 1 million hectares of brackish water coastal areas particularly around the Delta regions of Nigeria which is currently under utilized.

- (c) “The effects of water quality parameters on fish production”
- (d) “The performance of some indigenous fish species for large scale fish farming in Nigeria”.
- (e) The degradation of the aquatic environment and sustainable management (Aquaculture) of the fisheries resources.
